

July 1 , 1984

(samedi le 30 juin)

Hier a trois heures de L'apres midi Molly nous a dit aurevoir pour l'eternite.

She did not suffer a bit - only she was exhausted with all the medication etc. She had gained a great deal of the weight she had lost but something went wrong and she went downhill fast.
All the nurses were disbelieving - no one had a clue this was possible. The funeral ~~is~~ Wed.
this week. July 4th

I can tell you now that my life will be completly a blank - all my activities were involved with her.

Geo.

"OUR MOM"

How dear, this appellation, coined by her sons and daughters four (Alex, Catherine, Betty, and Bill) who deeply cared as they shared the tender warmth and affection of "their Mom", Muriel Irene (Gilmour) Markle.

A huge heartful of kindness in a tiny frame. A feel for the fun things of life! These were the hallmarks of "Molly" as she affectionately came to be known by the many who were drawn to this diminutive lady with the twinkling charm -- "our Mom".

First it was Molly and Jack. Their sharing of the difficult years of the Depression when nary a starving soul was turned from the Markle door in Vermilion and Camrose. Then the trauma of World War II with two sons enlisted and the strain to be brave when one went missing.

Then it was Molly and George. How perfectly it seemed ordained that together, in endearing companionship, they should brighten and enliven the lives of those about them.

This afternoon, in this quiet cloister, is a time of sadness and gladness. Sadness at the gentle passing of "our Mom". Gladness for the full measure of years of happiness bequeathed her to share, so unreservedly, with her children, grand-children, great grand-children, and the many who came to know her, affectionately, as just "Molly".

* * *

A brief eulogy on the life of the late Muriel Irene (Gilmour) Markle.
Composed by her son, Alex Markle.
Delivered by Rev. Wm. Graham at Funeral Services, Foster and McGarvey Funeral
Chapel, at 3:15 p.m., Wednesday, July 4, 1984

* * *

MURIEL Irene (Gilmour) Markle = MOLLY

Décédée à Edmonton le 30 juin 1984

Enterrée au lot des Markle, au "Edmonton Cemetary"

